I commute 2-3 hours a day in my car and find Satellite radio invaluable. My auto came with a radio installed and I can listen to the "free" radio if I want but instead I have chosen to purchase both the equipment and a monthly subscription to satellite radio. I would only do this if I found the value far greater than what I can receive for "free." In effect I am surprised why my choices would be limited by the FCC in this regard. Competition is the backbone of America and limiting this only serves to weaken the nation and our ability to compete on a global scale. Technology changes are rapid and we need a regulatory environment that can embrace them so we do not fall behind.
